...ees Growth Of ...sort To ...or In U.S.

...r. Israel Goldstein, president of ...e American Jewish Congress, de...ed that the pending McCarran... other omnibus immigration bills ...uld draw an Iron Curtain around ...daries and keep out all but ...row categories of immigrants of ... U.S. In an address at Stephen ...se Congress House, 15 East ...hty-Fourth Street, Dr. Goldstein ...d seventy-five members of the ...ongress' national executive com...ittee from thirty cities that the ...ills provided many new grounds ...r excluding future immigrants, ...r deporting persons already le...ally admitted, and for depriving ...aturalized Americans of their citi...enship.

Other speakers at the meeting were Nathan L. Edelstein, a member of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations and national secretary of the Congress; and Shad Polier, chairman of the executive committee, who presided.

Dr. Goldstein said the proposed measures would place a legislative seal of inferiority on all persons of other than Anglo-Saxon origin and would result in millions of naturalized Americans having to "live in permanent fear of deportation or loss of citizenship for the most trivial and frivolous of reasons."

"No country," he declared, "can enact such legislation and hope that its voice will ever be heeded with respect or its declarations of noble intent regarded with anything but skepticism."

He saw a "hopeful development" in the arrest by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of ten members of the Ku Klux Klan on charges of flogging two white persons, but questioned against undue ... [illegible] ... investigation of acts of vandalism and terror in Philadelphia, said that "a pattern of resort to violence and intimidation is now developing throughout the country."

"The incidents," he added, "have occurred in the North and the South, the East and the West. Their victims have been youths and adults, white and colored, Jews and Christians. Whether there has been any communication between these groups is less important than the fact that private groups are resorting to the use of terror to intimidate those

Reject Over-All Plan As Threat To Autonomy

Bnai Brith and the American Jewish Committee, two of the most influential American Jewish organizations, have served notice that they reject vital sections of the MacIver report for a reorientation and redivision of functions among six major national Jewish agencies.

Bnai Brith, through one of its arms, the Anti-Defamation League, and the A. J. C. are members of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, which commissioned Dr. Robert M. MacIver, professor emeritus of political philosophy and sociology at Columbia University, to make a study of Jewish organizational life.

So vehement was the opposition of the two organizations to certain of the MacIver recommendations that the possibility arose that the two groups would bolt the N. C. R. A. C. should the latter seek to impose them, says the New York Herald Tribune.

The study was undertaken because many local Jewish welfare funds and community councils believe that there was overlapping and waste in the activities of the various Jewish groups. The other Jewish Labor Committee, Jewish national agencies involved are the War Veterans, Union of American Hebrew Congregations and American Jewish Congress.

In substance the proposed reallocations would take from the American Jewish Committee and the A. D. L. a number of their functions and give them to the other groups. In addition, the N. C. R. A. C., now a co-ordinating body, would have its hand strengthened to exercise a measure of control over its constituent bodies.

Final decision by the N. C. R. A. C. organizations will be taken on June 15. If the majority adopts the MacIver recommendations the American Jewish Committee and the A. D. L. may carry their fight to continue their activities directly to all Jewish communities, says the Herald Tribune.

The national executive committee of Bnai Brith at a recent meeting in Washington asserted that "proposals for dismemberment of the Anti-Defamation League will affect adversely the whole Jewish community" and directed its representatives "not to enter into, or authorize, or participate in any

Fled Hitler, Was Influence On U.S. Music Scholars

Dr. Alfred Einstein, seventy-one, internationally known musicologist and a cousin of Dr. Albert Einstein, died at El Cerrito, Cal. Dr. Alfred Einstein's immigration to the United States in 1939 as a result of Hitler's persecution of the Jews was described at the time as a lucky event for America. When he joined the faculty of Smith College shortly after his arrival, one American music critic said his "influence should be a force of inestimable importance in developing American music scholars."

Dr. Einstein's work in America, his scholarly books, essays and criticisms proved that critic right. The German music scholar, a native of Munich, was educated at the University of Munich. From 1918 to 1933, the time of Hitler's rise to power, he was editor of Germany's leading musicological journal, the "Zeitschrift fur Musikwissenschaft."

Five years after the end of World War I, Dr. Einstein, in a letter to "The London Times," looked sadly at the chaos in his native land and called for a return to reason in its music circles. "German musical life is torn like Germany herself," he wrote.

The chaos of the period, however, was minor compared to the rise of the Nazi Party. But Dr. Einstein, even as music critic for the powerful "Berliner Tageblatt," of Berlin, from 1927 to 1933, viewed happenings around him quietly as a scholar would, and in terms of its effect on music.

In 1933 he fled to England, where he conducted intensive research in the British Museum and discovered much long lost music and history of music. Among his discoveries were five forgotten Haydn symphonies, several compositions by Mozart unknown up until that time, and he created a new edition of Koechel's catalogue of Mozart's works. He also spent some time near Florence, Italy, probing into musty records of Italian music of the sixteenth century, one of his favorite subjects.

When one of his books, "Mozart, His Character and Work," was published in 1946, a leading American critic attested to Dr. Einstein's meticulous research when he said few living men "are as familiar with his (Mozart's) daily life and character, his family, his friendships, his ancestral background, his working methods and his specific connections with the culture of his time."

Dr. Einstein, who had several of his books published during his stay in America, said of his profession: "It is less concerned with names and dates, or with formal analysis, than with real appreciation. It is more concerned with the understanding of music as a function of life, as related to the culture of its time."

"Musicology," he added, "is a fairly new term for a fairly old field of research."

In 1944 Dr. Einstein became a citizen of the United States. In 1950 he moved from Northampton, Mass., to the solitude of the bay area near El Cerrito, Calif. Dr. Einstein was a member of the American Musicological Society, the Music Library Association and the Royal Music Association.

People In Israel Face Hard Time

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's Government won a 64-44 vote of confidence at the end of a three-day debate in the Knesset (Parliament) on economic measures to check runaway inflation, stabilize Israeli currency and stimulate the flow of foreign capital to the country. The four parties that cast opposition votes were united only on a non-confidence motion, and otherwise were in conflict in their evaluation of the new economic steps.

There was an unanimous feeling that the people were facing a hard time, marked by rising costs, bankruptcies and unemployment, reports the New York Times. However, a Cabinet spokesman said that the situation could be stabilized in a few months.

Finance Minister Eliezer Kaplan said: "Many people will suffer. But this is a serious operation necessary to save the whole body. It can't be done through prayers."

It was generally agreed that the standard of living would be lowered as a result of multiple exchange rates for Israeli currency, which would set rates of $1 and $1.40 for certain transactions in addition to maintaining the old official rate of $2.80.

Leftist opposition groups predicted that prices for essential imports would double or treble, but that wage increases, in accordance with escalator clauses in cost-of-living agreements, would not be able to keep up with the spiral.

Government supporters argued, however, that rising prices would mean a shrinkage of purchasing power and would be a useful weapon in combatting inflation, says the Times. Furthermore, they contended that the higher exchange rates would encourage transfers of capital to Israel in the form of goods and thus further narrow the gap between supplies and purchasing power.

U. J. A. Aims To Exceed Past Fund Raising

The United Jewish Appeal opened its nation-wide campaign for $151,500,000 with the announcement that in the last six weeks eighteen cities alone had adopted goals amounting to more than $67,000,000. This is nearly one-half of the Appeal's fixed objective this year to meet Jewish needs throughout the world and especially in Israel.

At Miami Beach, Florida, Jewish leaders from various sections voted to form a national campaign cabinet and named thirty-six community leaders as a volunteer general staff. Morris W. Berinstein, business figure and civic leader of Syracuse, N.Y., was named chairman of the national campaign cabinet. Edward M. M. Warburg, of New York, is general chairman of the Appeal, and the national chairmen are William Rosenwald, Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, and Rudolf G. Sonneborn, all of New York.

Although New York did not set a formal goal, campaign leaders are urging contributors throughout Greater New York to repeat and exceed their record of 1948, when they contributed $52,000,000 to the United Jewish Appeal. In 1948, the Appeal raised a record $150,000,000 for its beneficiary agencies, the United Israel Appeal, the Joint Distribution Committee and the United Service for New Americans.

In stressing the need for funds for the rehabilitation and resettlement of newcomers to Israel as well as aiding distressed Jews overseas and refugees entering the United States, Mr. Berinstein asserted that the United Jewish Appeal would be able to realize its 1952 goal "only if all communities focus on repeating and exceeding their 1948 fund-raising accomplishments."

"This year", he said, "as Israel again fights for its life—this time in a war for economic survival and independence—American Jews must assure victory by rallying to the United Jewish Appeal with $1,500,000 more than they contributed four years ago."

He told the conference that with United Jewish Appeal aid Israel had made "sensational" progress in the last four years. He said Israel had received more than 700,000 "homeless and endangered refugees," and added that "what is generally not known is that in face of their difficulties Israel has scored wide industrial and economic progress."

With funds received from the annual United Jewish Appeal and other sources, Israel has paved and improved 800 miles of road. In agriculture, Mr. Berinstein said, collective farming units, which numbered 118,000 before Israel became a nation, now exceed 411,000. He said the area of irrigated land under cultivation had been "doubled" and that where Israel had 700 tractors four years ago, it now has 4,000.

"Despite these gains," he said, "the rate of progress has not kept up with the rate of immigration — and it is this disparity which has produced a critical situation in the land. Israel's austerity, shortages and underproduction must now be overcome by a concentrated, devoted effort which will turn the great home-coming of Israel's 700,000 immigrants into the great home-making."

Mr. Warburg, in calling attention to the record sums raised in 1948, asserted that "it is the purpose of this national inaugural conference to set a standard of giving that will galvanize American Jews to repeat their inspiring record of four years ago."

Claims Arabs Plan War Of Revenge

Rabbi Itzchak Meyer Lewin, Israeli Minister of Welfare, declared in New York that the Arab countries were preparing for a war of revenge against Israel. Rabbi Lewin spoke to 1,500 persons at a public reception for him at the Central High School for Needle Trades, 225 West Twenty-fourth Street. The meeting was arranged by the Agudath Israel of America. Increased aid for Israel might help to stabilize it and avert a "second round" of warfare, the speaker declared.

The Agudath Israel party in Israel, while a member of the coalition Government, does not consider the establishment of the new state as a fulfillment of century-old Jewish aspirations, the minister said. This will come, he declared, when traditional Jewish law, is established on a maximum scale that will provide spiritual content for Judaism.

At the moment his group is seeking action on a "minimum" religious program that calls for an independent school system and respect for traditional religious observances such as the Sabbath. Rabbi Lewin heads the Agudath Israel World Organization, international movement of Orthodox Jews.

Fear Purge Of Czech Jews By Communists

A Communist purge of Jews and "bourgeois objectivists" from scientific and other cultural fields in Czechoslovakia is expected to begin soon, according to reliably informed experts on Czechoslovak affairs. These experts, who are associated with Radio Free Europe in Munich, Germany, have been assembling material from monitored official Czechoslovak reports as well as private advices obtained from refugees who have crossed the border into Germany.

Radio Free Europe is a private broadcasting station established by the Committee for a Free Europe, a United States group. The station is devoted largely to sending anti-Communist broadcasts to Czechoslovakia and Hungary, and has been unusually successful in obtaining responses from those countries.

The impending anti-Semitic purge was disclosed by the Prague radio, which announced that "a congress against cosmopolitanism and bourgeois objectivism in science" was to be held in Brugne from February 27 to March 1, reports the New York Times.

The word "cosmopolite" is accepted generally as a Communist euphemism for Jews. It was initiated in articles and broadcasts in the Soviet Union, and has been adopted by the satellite countries. Bourgeois objectivists are those who do not pattern scientific con-

Morgan's Becomes One-Stop Shopping Centre With Steinberg's Supermarket

For the opening in Henry Morgan & Co. Ltd., of the newest supermarket of Steinberg's, representatives of local women's clubs were present. Of the National Council of Jewish Women, there were: Mrs. Arthur Lavin, vice-president, and Mesdames Louis J. Notkin, J. D. Frankel, Solomon Vineberg, Benjamin Robinson, H. Laurie, H. Sarkin, and H. D. Frankel; Montreal Women's Club, of which Mrs. P. G. Delgado is president; Business and Professional Women's Club, of which Mrs. Jackson Saunders is president; and the Montreal Council of Women, of which Mrs. R. G. Gilbride is president. Mrs. Victor Michaels was among the members present.

The supermarket opened in the basement of Morgan's, making the store a "one-stop shopping centre". Morgan's and Steinberg's hours will differ slightly, the latter operating from 8.45 a.m. to 6.30 p.m., daily, and to 9 on Fridays. Morgan's Aylmer and Union Avenue entrances will give access to the market and after regular Morgan hours. There are two elevators and three wide stairways from the main floor converging on the food-market at one wall, giving the shopper a complete vista on entering, to "spot" the shopping scene.

In a press preview the day prior to the opening, Henry W. Morgan, president, and J. Bartlett Morgan, general-manager of Henry Morgan & Co. Ltd., accompanied Sam Steinberg, president of Steinberg's, on a tour of every phase of the behind-the-scenes operations, which include, partly, the meat, fruit, frozen food and dairy cold-storage sections, through the processing rooms, and huge storage chambers. They were accompanied by Lt.-General A. E. Walford, comptroller of Morgan's, and other executives of the department store; and by members of the Steinberg family, and grocery executives; as well as members of the press and radio. The Canadian Jewish Review was represented by Mrs. Lena A. Newman, the advertising manager.

THE LAW AND THE COURTS OF ISRAEL

(Concluded from Last Week)

It turned out over a thousand lawyers who were admitted to practice as advocates, and a large proportion of the judges, magistrates and officers of the Courts. The legal profession grew every year also by the admission of foreign lawyers coming from Europe and America, who had to pass a searching examination in the law of the country. Women as well as men were permitted to practise as advocates and several Jewish women qualified.

The Government of Israel inherited this partly British, partly religious, and partly Ottoman system of Law and Courts. So far it has done little to change the basis. The Religious Bloc in the Knesset, which is a part of the Coalition Government, steadily agitates for the introduction of Jewish law and Jewish tradition. The Draft Constitution, which was submitted to the Knesset but has been shelved for a time, includes an article that legislation should be in accord with the principles of Jewish Law. But these demands have not yet received application in practice.

Some big changes have been brought about by the new circumstances. The English judges have disappeared, and the English language has vanished from the Courts, although English law reports and English text books are regularly quoted. All the Judges of the High Court and District Courts and almost all the Magistrates are Jews, many of whom were leading advocates or magistrates in the British Administration. Hebrew is the sole language of pleading and judgment, except that one Arab Magistrate, appointed to deal with cases of Arabs in the Nazareth District where a considerable Arab population remains, conducts cases in Arabic.

It is notable, too, that one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, Rabbi Assaf, is a celebrated Rabbinical Scholar, Professor of Gaonic Literature at the Hebrew University and recently its Rector. The Rabbinical Tribunals retain their jurisdiction for the Jewish population, but so far no change has been made by way of giving them exclusive jurisdiction in all matters of personal status. The religious Tribunals of Moslems and Christians also retain their jurisdiction for members of their community, and a number of Moslem Kadis have been appointed by the Government of Israel.

The High Court of Israel is supreme. The judges of the High Court are appointed by the Minister of Justice, but only after obtaining the approval of the Constituent Assembly. They are irremovable, except by a vote of the legislature because of misconduct; they enjoy complete independence of the executive and may pronounce upon the validity of legislation.

The use of the two fundamental instruments of British justice for the protection of the individual against arbitrary action—Habeas Corpus and Mandamus—remains extraordinarily developed in Israel. Their use is probably more frequent absolutely than in Great Britain, and proportionately to the population many times greater. It is notable that the Hebrew daily press pays great attention to the cases that are heard before the High Court of Justice, which testifies to the interest of the general population.

The members of the legal profession will in future be recruited from graduates of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Last winter a Law Faculty was initiated at the University. It provides a full four-year course which will prepare men and women to become advocates, judges or civil servants. After obtaining his law degree, the candidate for the legal or judicial profession will have to take further practical examinations and serve a period of apprenticeship, so that he will be fully qualified only after six years.

The programme of the Law Faculty in the first year includes the principles of four systems of Law—Jewish, Roman, Islamic and English: a heavy enough burden on the young student. The history of Jewish Law and an understanding of the main principles of Talmudic jurisprudence are an important part of his course in the first two years. In addition, he follows lectures in political economy, political science, and either in philosophy or psychology.

The language of lecturing is exclusively Hebrew, but the student must be able to write and speak English or French, and pass an examination in one of those languages, for as yet few of the books of legal study are in Hebrew. That deficiency is, however, likely to be remedied quickly.

The Government has set up commissions to consider modifications of the criminal law code and of the civil and criminal procedure. It introduced last year a Bill to abolish capital punishment except for treason, which is now under examination by a committee of the Knesset. Gradually, no doubt, some broad principles of Hebrew Law will be adopted by the Legislator in the basic Code. It has been announced that a new Civil Code is to be drafted within the next five years. A law of succession will be the first part to be laid before the Knesset.

One thing may be assumed; the Law of Israel will be progressive. Mr. Justice Douglas of the Supreme Court of the United States, who visited Israel in the summer of 1949, and sat one day with the High Court in Jerusalem, declared his conviction that the Courts of Israel, like the highest Courts in Anglo-Saxon countries, would be the faithful guardian of liberties of the individual, and a palladium of Justice.

A.J.C. Plans To Join General Struggle For Rights

A program of Jewish community life that would be based on the principles and ideals of American democracy and the values of Jewish heritage, "rather than on the negative fight against anti-Semitism," was called for by Dr. Israel Goldstein, newly elected president of the American Jewish Congress, in New York.

Speaking at a reception in his honor, given by officers of the Congress at the Statler Hotel, Dr. Goldstein held that a program of Jewish community life must be founded on a two-fold motivation—"a sense of kinship with the Jewish people throughout the world and a sense of obligation to participate in the general struggle for a better social order."

"We want to see," he added, "a Jewish way of life developed on the American scene which will accentuate the positive spiritual and cultural values in Judaism and the sense of relationship with the Jewish people across time and space."

Dr. Goldstein stressed that his proposed program meant "joining in the struggle to resist every threat against human rights, whatever race, creed or class may be affected; it means cooperation with all groups genuinely devoted to the furtherance of democracy and world peace."

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, acting president of the World Jewish Congress and co-chairman of the Jewish Agency for Israel, appealed to the democratic nations and the United States Government to give full support to Israel's claim for $1,500,000,000 in reparations from Germany. He asserted that "there can be no doubt in anyone's mind of Germany's obligation to pay; the German Government itself has recognized this obligation."

Rabbi Irving Miller, former president of the American Jewish Congress, said that the organization had a "total program for the creative Jewish survival of American Jews, a program of positive identification with the Jewish people everywhere and of integration into the general culture of America."

Laud Efforts To Promote Hebrew

Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, American Zionist leader, asserted in New York that Western European and American Jewish communities never had asked or desired "any special status as national minorities." He said such a concept was "alien to the political structure of these countries," in which, he said, "Jews desire equal rights of citizenship and freedom from all forms of discrimination."

Speaking at the thirty-fifth annual dinner of the Histadruth Ivrith of America (Hebrew Language and Culture Association) at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Dr. Silver stressed that adherence to Hebrew traditions and language was important for the continued existence of the Jewish community as a cultural entity in the United States.

In a message to the assemblage, President Truman declared that "Hebraic culture carries within it the traditions of the prophets of old who founded the ethical system by which we are trying to live today." Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel, in a message to Samuel J. Borowsky, president of Histadruth Ivrith, lauded the efforts of the organization to promote widespread interest among American Jews in the study of Hebrew.

Dr. Silver declared the American Jewish community "of tomorrow will continue as it is today, and for as long as America remains free," adding, "it will be centered in Judaism or it will not survive." Mr. Borowsky asserted that "there is a prevailing recognition on the part of the American Jewish community that a knowledge and appreciation of the Hebrew language is fundamental."

Samuel Fishman, vice-president of Histadruth Ivrith, was presented with a citation in recognition of his efforts "to the Hebrew movement."

COLUMBIA CENTRE TRAINS STUDENTS IN NEAR EAST WORK

Columbia University has introduced a Centre of Israeli Studies as part of its School of International Affairs and Department of Economics, its main purpose being to train students, both for professional and teaching careers with special emphasis on Israel, Judaism and the Near East, and to produce specialists on Israel, its people and Israel in its Near Eastern setting. The Centre, too, hopes to advance knowledge and understanding of the area, through research work and publications by its staff and students as well as through the admission of students from other faculties.

Heading the Centre is Salo W. Baron, Professor of Jewish History, Literature and Institutions at Columbia. Among the teachers during the first year was Professor A. Bonne, of the Hebrew University, who lectured on the Economic Organization and Development of Israel and the Middle East. Although asked to stay on, Professor Borne, Associate Professor of Economics and Sociology of Israel and the Middle East, was forced to decline in order to return to the Hebrew University at the end of his leave. Dr. Jacob C. Hurewitz is the lecturer on Political and Social Institutions of Israel and the Near East and staff members of other Columbia faculties are giving courses in Arabic, Hebrew and Turkish, the Art and Culture of the Near East, and Jewish History.

In spite of its late announcement, a considerable number of students registered for the course during the first year. The role which the Middle East is now playing in world affairs has stimulated interest in the Centre. The governments of Iran, Pakistan, Turkey and several Arab countries have now allocated monies for study on the Middle East area. While many people favour the establishment of separate centres of study, it is the hope of the Columbia University authorities that all will soon be unified and that the Centre at Columbia will become the foremost authority on the Middle East in the United States at this time.

What Judaism Means To Me

BY THE LATE SIR PHILIP HARTOG, DISTINGUISHED BRITISH EDUCATIONALIST

I suppose that most of us, when asked to speak about religion, become keenly conscious of the gap between the ideals at which we aim, and at which we want others to aim, and our own attainment. We do not wish our ideal to be judged by ourselves, and we should prefer to remain silent. Yet there are perhaps times to speak.

The long history of the Jews is, with comparatively brief intervals, a history of crises, internal and external. No other people has suffered from so many crises, because no other people has been persecuted so long and survived. Persecution from without has been matched by struggle within, in part but not wholly due to that persecution. Yet Anatole Leroy Beaulieu, an ardent Catholic, the author of Israel chez les Nations, said that so long as the Jews were persecuted they would be a strong people, for they would lose the physically weak by death and the morally weak by desertion.

I want briefly to explore the truth of that dictum. We all know those "morally weak" both in this country and abroad, especially in Germany, who became baptized or who ceased to be Jews for the sake of material advantages for themselves or their children. A brilliant Jewess in Germany in the eighteenth century said that Judaism was not a religion but a misfortune—that was all it meant to her.

To others of us, as to the indifferent, it also means both for us and for our children the inheritance not of a misfortune but of a burden; yes, but the burden of a flag to be borne aloft, and of a torch to be carried forward, sometimes through the tumult of a world still liable to be overwhelmed by moral darkness, by the hatred and narrow violence from which we once thought that Judaism, and the religions sprung from Judaism, had saved the West.

I have spoken of the religions sprung from Judaism. I know people who ask, comfortably, is the difference between Judaism and Christianity enough for us to preserve, instead of making ourselves the majority? I say undoubtedly, Yes. Like others, the recent waves of materialism and pagan hatred have made me feel, more than I did before, the strong bonds of common belief and sympathy which unite Jews both to Christians and to Moslems. But I feel no less strongly that it would be retrogression, and no advance, to abandon that distinguishing simplicity of the faith in the one God, the God of the universe and the human soul, with whom each loving heart can have communion, immediate and direct, without intercession of prophet, or saint, or son.

This difference (not the only one) affects each individual; it is great, real, not to be ignored. Judaism teaches that we are all alike children of One Father, none, no, not any, perfect or divine, though divinity speaks within us and may be revealed to each one. I have quoted before the saying of James Darmesteter: the prophet is the man who reveals to the human heart the tyranny of its own ideal. Nor was that revelation of our great prophets once and for all.

Revelation is constant and progressive. Like poetry, religion may be formulated in a Book, or in Books; but the miracle of its real existence is ever created afresh in those by whom it is experienced, whose actions and way of life it inspires; and each one of us matters, however humble, however far from fulfilling his own ideals.

One word of the relation of religion to science. At an early period in my life I thought that science "explained everything." But the more deeply I studied the history and philosophy of science, the more I realised that science is what Kirchhoff and Mach and Karl Pearson have defined as a "simplified description" of nature; true "explanation" and intimate understanding lie outside the scope of science. As Professor Baumgardt pointed out not long since in the Hibbert Journal, mysticism and science have each their parts to play in our life; to introduce mysticism into science is a mistake; to suppose that science excludes mysticism is no less a mistake.

Mysticism is at the root of the primitive belief of the savage, the same kind of mystic feeling is an essential of religion. The great gift of the Hebrews to the world was, it seems to me, to ally that mysticism to the moral consciousness. Ethics may tell us to do as we would be done by. It deals with a problem of conduct. It is religion that tells us also to love our neighbour; that goes beyond conduct into human motive, and inspires conduct with a tenderness that not merely rational doctrine can impart to it.

The whole idea of God, of love of God and love of man, is essentially mystical. To the savage, nature is terrifying, unsparing, ruthless. It is by a mystical revelation that Jews have come to recognise the existence of a righteous and loving God, who, in spite of battles in which we suffer and fall, makes us willing that we and our children should fight and suffer and fall, and still believe that we are suffering in a great cause—though we may be despised and rejected by the ignorant. With a confidence purged of all pride, we feel ourselves to be units in a great succession of witnesses.

I am conscious that I have said nothing so far of Jewish observance, which sometimes seems to be all that there is of Judaism to very many Jews. I cannot for a moment imagine that the Jews as Jews would have survived if behind these forms there had not been something more real and living than many of these observing people could express in their own words. One asks oneself, are these forms worth preserving? To me and those who feel as I do, undoubtedly Yes.

I shall be as frank about the Sabbath, and admit the difficulties. At an early period in my own career, I had to choose between its strict observance and my own work in the world, and I gave up the strict observance, though I have always tried to observe it as much as I could. We need symbols of our beliefs, both mystical and rational, and to me very many of the symbols hallowed by the history of centuries are dear, and I feel that, like the common prayers in the synagogue, they keep me in closer touch with those who share the faith with which they are associated.

The idea of a Jewish race, apart from Jewish religion, leaves me entirely cold, nay antagonistic, except when I see Jews persecuted because of their birth. I see no justification for the survival of the Jews as a separate community apart from their religion. I feel myself much closer to many Christians, "Aryans," English, French, German, than to Jews without Judaism (though many such Jews have not lost as much of their Judaism as they imagine). I regard the worship of the Jewish "race", of Jewish "blood and soil", as itself essentially anti-Jewish, on a par with the worship of a Germanic "blood and soil" — as something unscientific, retrograde and dangerous. But that does not prevent me from feeling a profound admiration for and sympathy with the building up of a Jewish home in Palestine for the persecuted, a movement which I have seen and admired with my own eyes. I feel myself able to work with many Zionists, more aware of the things which unite us than those which separate.

But to me it is Liberal Judaism that is the real historic Judaism that has lasted and grown, and lives and will live, a Judaism not static but dynamic, conscious of an unforgettable and splendid past, but still more conscious that the past is only of value in so far as it is lived afresh by each of us, in a fight for the moral enlargement and betterment of all mankind in the future. That is, briefly and imperfectly expressed, what Judaism means to me.

clusions to the Communist party theoretical line.

Experts of Radio Free Europe, coordinating material from official sources in Czechoslovakia with advices of their own, also expressed the belief that the Prague Government was in the final stages of preparing a show trial against Dr. Vladimir Clementis, Rudolf Slansky and other deposed leaders.

According to a Prague broadcast, 700 university scientific workers, representatives of research units and military and medical leaders have been invited to the Bruenn congress. Vaclev Kopecky, Minister of Information and Education, will deliver the main address. The program will include the following topics: Ideological purification and the renascence of Czechoslovak science, revision of teaching in schools, and discussion of techniques for applying systematically in scientific work the thoughts of Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin.

There have been previous Communist denunciations of "cosmopolites," notably those by Antonin Zapotocky, Czechoslovak Premier, who has inveighed against persons "who have no roots in the native soil," according to Radio Free Europe officials.

The official anti-Semitic wave began, however, at the time of Mr. Slansky's dismissal. Czechoslovak newspapers began to adopt the Russian anti-Semitic technique of printing a Jewish-sounding name in parenthesis after the names of such persons as M. Slansky, says the New York Times. For example, M. Slansky was called "Saltzman."

The selection of Bruenn as the site of the scheduled purge meeting may be significant. Officials of Radio Free Europe have eyewitness evidence that this city has been the scene of street demonstrations, in which windows have been broken and Communists beaten. These eyewitnesses reported that Bruenn had been particularly affected by an economic crisis brought on by the rapid transition of the Czechoslovak economy.
